I know plenty of actresses who are cast into films/projects who are NOT blonde Laura.... and whilst I may be blonde, trust me when I say I work very hard for every role I get. Nothing is handed on a plate to me on account of my hair colour. I like to think I have talent which is recognised by my peers. It takes all kinds of people to make up a good picture on our TV screens. I think we all deserve a fighting chance to be cast if that is our desire in life (irrespective of hair colour, eye colour and body shape). As for Reality TV - seldom are they REAL people.....they're all extremes of what exist in our society. I'd never make it into Reality TV (not that I want to mind) - purely because I'm not eccentric enough to be fond interesting for that kind of Media. lol

Can someone explain this to me? I am fearless so I apologize if I offend anyone with this, but why do some women who have made it, so non-supportive of women making it? I ask this because I recently went to an event at PITCH FEST. A man I have met several times who is a writer and producer (and I'd love it if he cast me because he has been so positive about women being cast and not being stereotypical about it) kept asking this one woman on the panel what advice she would give to women trying to make it. The woman practically out right refused to answer- she kept side stepping the question. It was odd. I looked around the room at the event to and noticed that I would say 70% of the people at the event were MALE. If you are a writer and want to make your own stuff- GO next year- even if just to the free classes. The co-founder of the EVENT is a woman. I have met her and she is nice and also on my STAGE 32. Go and change the statistics. And cast non-traditional women- not the blond (sorry VAL) or the model- but women with talent who are REAL but not for REALITY TV for ACTING Please.
