I am a poet. So I think in symbolism and metaphors. Looking at the story of Adam and Eve in the bible I don't think it means what it really means on the surface. I think it is a watered down rated G version of the actual events.

Metaphors were first explained by Aristotle in the time of the Greeks. But that does not mean people did not use the concept before that. Metaphor is where language can have a hidden or symbolic meaning.

First there is that pesky snake. Now what can a snake be if not a snake? What if it is a symbol for something else? What part of the human anatomy could be referenced as a snake? I hope I don't have to spell this out more.

What about the apple? Apples have seeds. In the story of Adam and Eve, Eve takes a bite out of the apple. Now I realize we assume that biology did not exist back in the time of the bible was written. There were enough humans walking around that some people probably figured out where babies come from and that it involved seeds, well semen. Going back to the Greeks again, Aristotle saw semen as coming from blood and food. The Greeks were aware of it and its importance. So an Apple is food and it has seeds so it can create life. The apple is semen.

If you have been thinking this through I think you know where this is going. Eve did not get an apple from a snake. She got a baby from Adam and had kids. But in true patriachial form We women did something bad and we women got the guy in trouble. Truth. Adam figured out what his snake wanted and acted on it. Stop blaming Eve. It was never her fault.
